GLASGOW – The Bureau of Land Management’s Glasgow Field Station facility has been closed due to newly-discovered problems that pose a threat to health and safety of building occupants.

While attempts are made to rectify the situation, calls should be directed to BLM’s Malta office at 654-5100 or to John Fahlgren in Glasgow at 263-4319. Efforts are underway to ensure the continuation of work in Glasgow. Some employees may work from home, some may commute to Malta, or other temporary office space may be located in Glasgow.

Twelve employees are normally stationed at the Glasgow office. The office was closed for two weeks last August when similar problems were discovered. Following remediation work last summer to remove mold in walls and rodent and bird feces in the air circulation plenum, air quality tests indicated the building was safe to reoccupy. An inspection this week revealed that many of the health and safety concerns that prompted last summer’s closure had returned.
